

I support KLOVE radio each month, and I appreciate that it is available to me in the small town where I live. I also appreciate that my whole family can listen to this station without being subject to obscene material; it is one reason why I'm glad to support this station.

I am concerned that if KLOVE were replaced with other programming, we would be subject to a variety of music and editorials (DJs, to be precise) that we would find objectionable. Already we have NPR for jazz and a good variety of information and viewpoints; there are countless CWM and "Oldies" and modern/hip/hard/pop rock available easily as well. The local Christian music station is nice... but KLOVE is unique in that the FOCUS is Contemporary Christian music.

I think that the music of KLOVE is encouraging to all its listeners. It has a very broad appeal, so that Christians of all kinds will enjoy it and feel encouraged to live with kindness, hope and love toward others. I would feel frustrated if such a positive element of our daily lives were erased with a decision to replace KLOVE with an LPFM station.

Thank you for listening to my comment.
